

Jamie D'Amico

Career Consultant

Jamie is a Career Consultant at ClearRock, where he specializes in helping people successfully move to the next chapter of their professional lives.

He believes that true happiness comes from getting to the root of what drives all of us, and that our occupations need to reflect that in some way. So, whether people need help finding that in their next role or want to dive into a new career path altogether, Jamie is driven by helping job seekers lay the foundation they need to achieve the success and happiness they deserve.

Jamie is a veteran of the tech sector, serving in marketing leadership positions and as a consultant for nearly two decades. His practical approach and unique perspective are born from experience that spans a variety of organizations – from small startups, to family businesses, to international corporations.

As an International Coaching Federation (ICF) certified coach, Jamie founded Fortify Leadership Coaching and Training where he serves individuals and organizations to help improve performance, employee engagement and organizational cultures, as well as working with professionals who are neurodivergent – including those with ADHD.

He received a bachelor's degree from the University of Dayton and completed the Executive Leadership Coaching program at Georgetown University.

Jamie moved to Washington, DC in 2001 and currently lives about 12 blocks from the White House. Originally from Rochester, NY, he's a diehard Buffalo Bills fan and even hosted a Bills-focused podcast for seven years. He considers himself an appreciator of 1970s funk bass lines and hopes to learn how to play bass himself.